National Development Plan 2007-2012

Plan
Country Mexico
Date established 31 May, 2007
Plan Nacional de Desarrollo 2007-2012
PND 2007-2012

Summary

The National Development Plan 2007-2012 represents Mexico’s main planning instrument that contains the government’s guiding principles for development, as well as objectives and strategies for achieving them. Sustainability is one of its main principles. The 2007-2012 plan is the first national development plan that includes strategies and objectives related to climate change, demonstrating that the Mexican Government recognises the importance of public policies in reducing the impact of greenhouse gas (GHG) emissions. In the framework of sustainable development, climate change objectives are pursued along with social and economic goals. As mentioned in Mexico's Vision on REDD+ (2010), REDD+ will be aligned to the NDP's specific objectives and guiding principles, specifically under the principles of fostering a competitive economy and job creation, equal opportunities, environmental sustainability, an effective democracy and responsible foreign policy.

Stakeholder engagement and participation

The Democratic National Planning System specifies that citizens have a voice in the elaboration of the National Development Plan. The process of public and open participation includes: 1) roundtables with members of various committees of the House of Representatives and the Senate; 2) roundtables with political parties; 3) forums conducted by various ministries and Federal government agencies; 4) public consultation conducted by the Office of the President through a telephone consultation centre, written consultation forms through the Mexican Postal Service, as well as website consultation and receipt of documents and proposals by the office of the presidency; and 5) meetings with specialists.
Related institutions

Government of Mexico [12]

External Links

Links
[10] https://theredddesk.org/countries/mexico